Judge pauses buyout for federal employees

Maureen Groppe and Joey Garrison
USA TODAY

A federal judge on Thursday paused the Trump administration’s deadline for more than 2 million federal employees to decide by the end of the day whether to resign or stay in their jobs in order to allow time for labor unions to challenge the plan’s legality.

U.S. District Judge George O’Toole in Boston issued a temporary restraining order and set a hearing for Monday.

The Trump administration’s lawyers had argued that extending the deadline on the last day would “markedly disrupt the expectations of the federal workforce, inject tremendous uncertainty into a program that scores of federal employees have already availed themselves of, and hinder the administration’s efforts to reform the federal workforce.”

Unions representing many of the nation’s federal workers charge that the new Republican administration’s “unprecedented offer” violates the law.

“We will continue to aggressively defend our members’ rights,” said Everett Kelley, president of the American Federation of Government Employees, one of the unions challenging the offer.

Workers were given barely more than a week to accept the administration’s blanket buyout, which union officials say did not appear to have followed federal procedures for reducing the size of the workforce.

Federal employees were told they would receive eight months of pay and benefits through September if they resigned by Thursday.

But Congress hasn’t approved funding for federal agencies past March 14. Democrats in Congress have warned federal workers not to accept the offer, citing this and their lack of trust in Trump to deliver the payments.

Unions have warned workers considering Trump’s offer that there’s no guarantee the president can or will stick to it. They’ve also said the offer lacks basic information about whether they might still be required to work for the government; whether they can get a private-sector job while still being paid by the federal government; and how their pensions, health insurance and other benefits and rights would be affected.

Critics have said the administration’s goal is to make working for the federal government so unpleasant that employees will be driven out.

The administration on Tuesday warned federal employees could be furloughed if they do not accept the buyout and that “the majority of federal agencies will be downsized,” with the Defense Department as an exception.

Federal workers who stay in their jobs have been told they must return to in-person work, embrace new “performance standards” and be “reliable, loyal and trustworthy” in their work, among other new “reforms” across the government.

Trump is pushing both to dramatically shrink the size of government and replace bureaucrats his team has perceived as hostile to his agenda with loyalists.

The offer came in a surprise email that hit inboxes at 6:04 p.m. on Jan. 28 with the subject line: “The Fork in the Road.”

Israel will draw up plan to relocate Palestinians

Cybele Mayes-Osterman

Israel’s defense minister said European nations that accused the country of disproportionate attacks in the Gaza Strip are “legally obligated” to accept Palestinian refugees as Middle Eastern countries rejected President Donald Trump’s proposal to relocate all of the enclave’s residents.

On Thursday, Israeli Defense Minister Israel Katz said he directed Israel’s defense forces to draw up “a plan that will allow any resident of Gaza who wishes to leave to do so, to any country willing to receive them.” He said the army would provide “exit options via land crossings, as well as special arrangements for departure by sea and air.”

Countries “such as Spain, Ireland, Norway, and others” that have accused Israel of disproportionate attacks on civilians and violations of laws governing war “are legally obligated to allow Gazans to enter their territory,” he wrote on X.

It comes after Trump deviated from decades of American foreign policy in the Middle East in his proposal on Tuesday to “take over” and “own” the war-torn Gaza Strip. The White House quickly walked back his comments, with spokesperson Karoline Leavitt telling reporters that Trump “has not committed to putting boots on the ground in Gaza” or to pay for its rebuilding.

But his statements still sent shock waves through Middle Eastern countries that worked to broker the ceasefire and hostage release deal struck between Israel and Hamas last month after more than a year of war.

Saudi Arabia, which has long refused to normalize its relations with Israel without the creation of a Palestinian state, said its position was still “firm and unwavering.”

In a call with French President Emmanuel Macron, Egyptian President Abdel Fattah el-Sissi urged other countries to “support the implementation of the two-state solution,” according to a statement from his office.

Forcibly displacing civilians is a war crime under the Geneva Conventions. Humanitarian organizations have already accused Israel of the intentional displacement of Palestinians, which they say amounts to “ethnic cleansing.”

But Trump’s proposal would go a step further – “it would move the U.S. from being complicit in war crimes to direct perpetration of atrocities,” Lama Fakih, of Human Rights Watch, said in a statement on Wednesday.

“It is vital to stay true to the bedrock of international law,” United Nations Secretary-General António Guterres told Trump on Wednesday. “It is essential to avoid any form of ethnic cleansing.”

Israel launched its 15-month siege of Gaza after Hamas, the militant group that governs the Palestinian enclave, launched a surprise attack on Israel, killing 1,200 Israelis and taking around 250 hostages.

In the ensuing conflict, more than 47,000 Palestinians were killed, according to the Hamas-run Gaza Health Ministry, including more than 13,000 children. Much of the enclave was reduced to rubble and 90% of its population was displaced.
