Authorities: NM gunman was high school student, 18

FARMINGTON, N.M. — The gunman who killed three people and wounded six others while roaming through his northwestern New Mexico neighborhood and apparently firing at random targets was a local 18-year-old high school student, authorities said Tuesday, noting they were still trying to determine a motive for the attack.

Beau Wilson lived in the Farmington neighborhood where he opened fire on Monday, killing three women, authorities said at a news conference. One of the three was a woman in her 90s, another was that woman's daughter, who was in her 70s, and the third was also a woman in her 70s, said Deputy Police Chief Baric Crum.

Witnesses and police say the gunman walked through the neighborhood a short drive from downtown Farmington spraying bullets until police arrived at the scene within minutes and shot and killed him.

Crum said the shooter was indiscriminately shooting at vehicles, but rounds also hit homes in the area.

"At this point our investigation is showing that he was indiscriminately shooting at vehicles but also we know that during that shooting rounds hit ... residences within the area," Crum said.

Farmington Police Deputy Chief Kyle Dowdy said that in November, Wilson legally purchased at least one of the weapons he used in the attack.

"The amount of violence and brutality that these people faced is unconscionable to me," Dowdy said. "I don't care what age you are, I don't care what else is going on in your life, to kill three innocent elderly women that were just absolutely in no position to defend themselves is always going to be a tragedy."

Four officers fired a total of 16 rounds at Wilson, including one of the two officers who were wounded Monday, said San Juan County Sheriff Shane Ferrari.

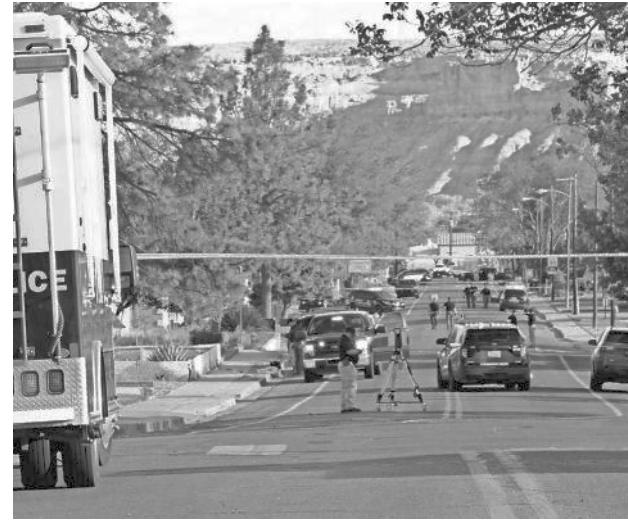

Mayor Nate Duckett said Tuesday that both wounded law enforcement officers — a local Farmington officer and a state police officer — were treated and released.

Authorities are still trying to determine the motive for the attack.

In a recorded video statement Monday night, Police Chief Steve Hebbe said the targets of the attack seemed to have been chosen at random.

Hebbe said the "suspect randomly fired at whatever entered his head to shoot at," as bullets pierced a half-dozen houses and several cars.

It was "honestly one of the most horrific and difficult days that Farmington has ever had as a community," he said.

Investigators are still struggling to determine a motive for a Monday shooting in Farmington, N.M., in which a gunman shot randomly at houses and cars, killing three people and wounding six others. SUSAN MONToya BRYAN/AP

Officers began receiving reports of gunshots about 10:57 a.m. and the first one arrived at the scene at 11:02 a.m., Hebbe said. Three minutes later, the gunman had been killed.

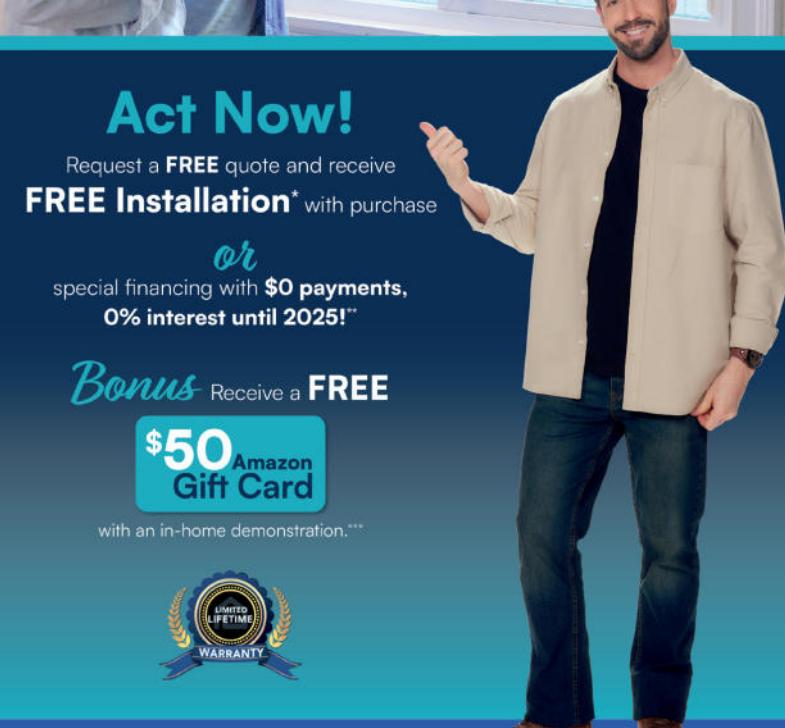

Joseph Robledo, a . tree trimmer, said he rushed home after learning that his wife, Jolene, and their year-old daughter had sought shelter in the laundry room when gunshots rang out. A bullet went through his daughter's window and room, without hitting anyone.

Jolene Robledo said she and her daughter had just finished breakfast when she heard "pop, pop, pop, pop," which she first thought was a car backfiring. She said they were going to run out the back door until she heard a male voice utter an expletive right outside the home, so she quietly shut the door and hid with her daughter between the washing machine and dryer.

"I mean it was crazy. I called my husband and he could hear the gunshots over the phone," she said. "He was freaking out and I was like 'don't hang up, don't hang up!'"

Joseph Robledo, 32, said he jumped a fence to get in through the back door. Out front, he found an older woman in the street who had been wounded while driving by. She appeared to have fallen out of her car, which kept rolling without her, he said.

"I went out to see because the lady was just lying in the road, and to figure just what the heck was going on," Robledo said. He and others began to administer first aid.
