Comprehensive Planning Facts. The Future Land Use Map is adopted as part of the County's Comprehensive Growth Management Plan and is one of the primary tools for managing land development. The Future Land Use designation of a parcel of land determines the general type of use allowed, as well as the maximum level of density or intensity allowed (such as the number of residential units per acre). The zoning regulations provide one or more zoning districts for implementing each Future Land Use designation. The zoning designation of a parcel of land determines, in more detail than the Future Land Use designation, what type and level of development may occur. A change to the Future Land Use Map requires three public hearings as follows:

1. Local Planning Agency (which makes a recommendation to the Board of County Commissioners).
2. Board of County Commissioners (to determine whether the proposed amendment should be transmitted to the Florida Division of Community Planning, the state land planning agency that oversees and coordinates comprehensive planning).
3. Board of County Commissioners (to determine whether the proposed amendment should be adopted).

Public involvement opportunities: All interested persons are invited to attend any or all of the above-described hearings and will have an opportunity to speak. Written comments will be included as part of the public record of the application.

Sharks

Because bull sharks can tolerate freshwater, they’ve been seen as far inland as Lake Okeechobee. They get into the headwaters of the St. Lucie, St. Sebastian and Loxahatchee rivers.

Juveniles can grow to over 6 feet long.

“We anticipate working with animals just over a meter (slightly more than 3 feet) in length for this study as they are more likely to experience a harmful algal bloom,” Brewster said.

Brewster hopes to tag 10 bull sharks during a harmful algae bloom in the lagoon.

“Timing will be the biggest challenge,” Brewster said. “Once we get the indication a bloom is developing, we’ll have to rush out there.”

The irony, she said, is that no one wants a harmful bloom to occur, “but we need one to do our research. The fact is that blooms are occurring more frequently. ... I expect that next summer, we’ll be in the thick of it.”

Tag, follow, retrieve

In the meantime, Brewster is helping develop the tags she and other researchers will attach to the sharks’ dorsal fins. The tags will:

- Have an acoustic transmitter so the animals can be tracked as they move.
- Have an accelerometer, a device “like a FitBit you’d wear on your wrist,” Brewster said, to record the sharks’ movements.
- Pop off after 5-7 days in the water and float to the surface.
- Have a satellite transmitter so researchers can find and retrieve the tag.

“We’re also relying on the Treasure Coast community, the people who are on the water and on the beaches,” Brewster said, “and hoping that if they find the tags before we do that they’ll give us a call.”

The tags will have a Harbor Branch logo and Brewster’s contact information.

Ryan Wood, of RWood Outdoors on YouTube and a Malabar resident, caught and released this bull shark from a Martin County beach June 22. CONTRIBUTED PHOTO

Bull sharks have a reputation for being aggressive, if not downright mean.

A bull shark is suspected of killing kiteboarder Stephen Schafer in February 2010 near Stuart Beach, the only known fatal shark attack in Martin County history, according to records going back to 1882.

“Yes, they’ve been known to attack people,” Brewster said, “but the probability of that is slim. I’ve worked with bull sharks since 2010 and haven’t had an incident yet. Of course, they are a species you have to be very careful with when you’re in the water with them.”

Brewster’s study is gearing up just as other researchers at Harbor Branch published findings showing large influxes of freshwater into the lagoon, such as Lake Okeechobee discharges, benefit bull sharks, but can be detrimental the overall ecosystem.

“Not all parts of the lagoon are equal,” said Matt Ajemian, a Harbor Branch assistant research professor and co-author of the study. “Areas with more salinity tend to have more biodiversity, more species.”

Salinity loss because of discharges “can change the whole dynamic of the lagoon ecosystem,” Ajemian said. “Animals that need the salinity can get pushed out, and that’s not good; they’re there for a reason.”

A lotta bull (shark)

- Range: Warm, shallow ocean water around the world, but can live in brackish water (like the Indian River Lagoon) and can be found in freshwater.

- How they live in freshwater: Kidneys and gills and near the tail prevent loss of body salt in low-salinity water.
- Size: Females can reach 5 feet and 500-plus pounds; males 7 feet and 200 pounds.
- State record: 517 pounds, Panama City Beach, October 1981.
- Appearance: Gray backs, white bellies; fin tips are black, especially in younger sharks; wide snouts and sharp, triangular teeth.
- The name: From the habit of butting prey with their heads before biting.
- Speed: Usually swim about 5 mph, but can reach 12 mph.
- Diet: Fish, turtles, crustaceans, dolphins, birds and other sharks.
- Humans: Bull sharks typically don’t eat people, but will attack anything that moves in its territory. Average of 16 attacks on humans each year in the U.S. Fatal attacks average every two years.

Reducing risk of shark attacks

- Always stay in groups; sharks are more likely to attack a lone person.
- Do not wander too far from shore, as this isolates an individual and additionally places you far away from assistance.
- Avoid being in the water during darkness or twilight hours, when sharks are most active and have a competitive sensory advantage.
- Don’t enter the water if bleeding or menstruating. A shark’s sense of smell is acute, and sharks are attracted to blood.
- Don’t wear shiny jewelry because the reflected light resembles the sheen of fish scales.
- Use extra caution when water is murky and avoid uneven tanning and bright-colored clothing, as sharks see contrast particularly well.
- Refrain from excess splashing, and don’t allow pets in the water because of their erratic movements.
